

Space Smells!

By Proff Francis / Wednesday 4th June

space

science

Since humanity first ventured into the great unknown of space, there has always been one question... what does space smell like? Well, now we know and you are never going to believe it!

Through the use of a pioneering new technology, named the Smellosphere, NASA astronauts have been able to discover the true scent of space. NASA Astronaut, Scott Kelly, has claimed that space has a distinct odour.

The Smellosphere is a nose-shaped attachment to the existing space suit and filters the vacuum of space into its distinguishable scents.

On the subject of space smells, Scott Kelly said, "Space has its own unique smell. Whenever a vehicle docks, the smell of space when you open up the hatch is very distinct." When pressed on the matter, Scott went on to say that if he had to liken the smell to something back on Earth, he said it would be marshmallows, apples and cat food.