

Introducing the Emotional and Social Curriculum for Schools

The Emotional and Social curriculum is a sequence of planned experiences which support children to practice and achieve proficiency in content and applied learning skills. The Mulberry Bush Emotional and Social curriculum focuses learning on the five core competencies of successful emotional and social development:

- Self awareness
- Self management
- Social awareness
- Relationship skills
- Responsible decision making

The curriculum has been designed to be delivered daily in an informal teaching situation, for example, circle time. The activities can be delivered in small groups or as a whole class session.

Social Curriculum

Who is the curriculum for?

The curriculum is for children who are functioning emotionally and socially significantly below their chronological ages. The curriculum can be used in mainstream and specialist provisions across a variety of age groups.

A great resource for anybody working with children in an education or care setting.

Training

As part of the package, training is included to ensure consistency and understanding of the curriculum delivery within the setting. The training aims are:

- To explain what the Emotional and Social Curriculum is and who it is for.
- To explain how the curriculum works.
- To consider the role of the adult within the group and how to form the group.
- To consider possible use of assessment tools to support the curriculum.
